Heading

The coastal archive opened its wooden shutters before sunrise. Volunteers carried maps into the reading room and carefully recorded each original label beside the central register.

Beyond the courtyard, a narrow pathway led toward the lighthouse. During at midday, the keeper inspected a brass compass and repaired a cracked window before supper.

Across the quiet harbor, fishing boats arrived with silver baskets. Neighbors delivered warm bread to the dock and counted lamps while the evening tide rose gently.